Reader Coming To Frankfort M. E. Sun

The Frankfort M. E. church is planning for a special treat this Sunday evening when Noah Beilharz, a reader will present "The Hoosier School Master" under the auspices of the church.

For 20 years Mr. Beilharz has been considered the greatest character impersonator on the Lyceum platform.

Mr. Beilharz is in every sense a great artist. In his quick changes before his audience, he does not use powder or paint to transform his face. By simply visualizing the character in his own mind, his face, his hands and entire body respond; and with the aid of wig or whiskers the character is complete. He has more than sixty characters at his command. In the "Hoosier Schoolmaster" he takes the part of 17 characters. He has given readings at the Joliet High School and comes very highly recommended.

Mokena Good Roads Committee Very Active

Mokena has developed a host of warm blooded good roads advocates within the past week, all boosting with might and main to get Wolf road on the state's hard road program and the advocates vow that no stone will be left unturned to get Wolf road on the hard roads map.

In order to handle the work in a proper manner, Mokena has organized a hard roads organization. A meeting was held at the Mokena school house Monday night at which plans were promulgated relative to getting Wolf road extended from the connection point with the new Southwest Highway at the Will and Cook county line at Alpine thru Mokena south to the Lincoln way and thence further on south to Andres to connect with the Kankakee road. This would be the most logical route to Chicago as it will be the shortest and most direct road.

A large number of new road advocates were present and signed the ever increasing membership list. Among those seen in the audience was M. C. Sieberling of the Illinois Valley Engineering Co., of Joliet.

Don C. Hall, Sr., member of the committee on resolutions read the resolutions setting forth the object of the newly formed organization and giving its official name as "The Mokena Development and Hard Roads Improvement Association". The resolutions were unanimously adopted. Secretary Herman Schweser was instructed to prepare and send a copy of the resolutions to the Southwest Towns Chamber of Commerce to show that Mokena is co-operating with them in the hard road program.

A membership drive was advocated and petitions have been put in the post office. Hensel's Drug Store and Sippel's store to get signatures of new members as it is proposed to get a membership of at least several hundred.

Let us all get enthusiastic over this project and go after our object with vigor and determination and we are sure to win out. Now let us boost for Mokena and the concreting of Wolf road. Mokena is the only village for miles about that has not got concrete state highway. Those who have tried to get the project thru individually have complained that the politicians have given them many promises in the past but no action, so it is up to the new organization to see that Mokena is given proper consideration.

Representative John Jenco of Joliet was to have attended the meeting Monday night but later telephoned that he was unable to come.

Millions Make Dream Come True

If you had $20,000,000 that you made yourself, were 62 years old, and wanted to enjoy yourself, what would you do? That was the position in which Ira D. Copley, former congressman, found himself. He has solved the problem. He left Chicago yesterday for Kiel, Germany. There the Krupps are building him a pleasure yacht costing $2,000,000. It will be his dream ship, the sort he dreamed about as a penniless youth when he was starting to make his fortune. The Copley ship which will be called "Happy Days", will start at in March on a tour of the world.

P. T. A. NOTES
At the last meeting of the Oak Lawn P. T. A., on Friday afternoon, Jan. 7th the subject discussed was "Children's Reading", and we are proud to say that it was one of our own members who gave us a splendid talk. Mrs. Exter, who is a mother and a teacher is qualified to give us good ideas from both viewpoints and one of the points that she stressed was the fact that one of the most important avenues to the acquiring of knowledge is closed to children of all ages, if the love for and ability to read are lacking. She urged parents to read with their children, and gave us a mental picture of the happy evenings a family can have when its members, all of them, gather together for a good story of how we may travel to foreign lands, enter into adventures, enjoy pleasures, thru the medium of fine books, that we may never be able to experience ourselves—and learn to love the beautiful in literature. Mrs. Exter left several lists of books, composed by authorities on best books for children, for the workers to take home for reference, and all agreed that the P. T. A. had had a most beneficial afternoon.

The next meeting will be on Feb. 4. Details will be announced later.

The following letter which was received by Mr. Landahl, is of special interest to Oak Lawn people:

CENSUS FIGURES REVEAL PRIVATE OWNERSHIP BEST

"Electric Service at Cost"
Failure in Ontario, Says
Toronto Newspaper.

Toronto, Ont.—A general condemnation of the Ontario government's hydro-electric system has followed a comparison of its costs and charges for service with those of the privately owned system of Quebec, says the Toronto Financial Post. The newspaper's comparisons are based upon figures compiled by the Canadian government's department of trade and commerce census figures for 1924.

Cost per horsepower developed of constructing the Ontario system exceeded the cost of the Quebec system 67 per cent, the Post says. "Results to the consumer are equally pronounced," the paper states. "Excluding taxes of the private companies in Quebec, the average revenue per kilowatt hour generated is less than 5.5 mills per kilowatt hour in Quebec, as against 13.2 mills for the government-owned and operated utilities of Ontario."

A reason for part of this wide difference is accounted for by the number of employees of the two systems. The Ontario system requires two and one-half men to produce the same amount of energy as the Quebec companies produce with one man, the Post explains.

"In every respect the private companies are more efficient and economical than the hydro power commission and associate municipalities of Toronto, despite their advantage of large concentration of high-head power at Niagara Falls, and an unlimited credit in the province."

"Power 'at cost' by hydro in Ontario is costing more than privately generated power in Quebec," the paper states.

Electric Utilities Save More Coal Than They Use, Government Says

Improvement in the efficiency of the generation of electricity by the sal use of gas fuel in the home and central station industry of the United States since 1919 has saved nearly 75,000,000 tons of coal, according to figures compiled by the United States geological survey. Translated into money, this saving has conserved about one-third of a billion dollars to the wealth of the nation.

Between 1919 and 1925, while the use of fuel increased 15 per cent, the power output swelled 80 per cent, the figures show. The saving of coal—one of our most important natural resources—was actually more than the quantity consumed.

Better generating equipment, interconnection, and more skilled operators are some of the factors accredited with the saving.

Royalty Would Ride
Electric Railways if Given the Opportunity

London.—One of the weaknesses of royal personages is to confide to intimate friends what they would most like to do if they were in other people's shoes.

King Edward often proposed to ride in London's underground railway.

Queen Victoria always wanted to ride a street car, but never even had a railway ticket in her hand.

King George, incognito, would prefer to attend a horse race and mingle with the crowd.

Queen Mary would ride on top of a London bus all day long.

Telephone Amazes Aliens
"It is not the towering buildings that loom from the sky as the ship docks; not the industrial plants that outstrip the world in production capacity that amazes the foreigner when he arrives in this country, but the efficiency and fearful universality of the telephone," says Arnold Bennett.

$300,000,000 SPENT BY U. S. ELECTRIC RAILWAYS DURING PRESENT YEAR

Electric railway companies in the United States are spending nearly $300,000,000 this year for plant maintenance and extensions. This amount is approximately 10 per cent greater than the average of the last three years and will be the largest expenditure of any year in the last 15. More than $150,000,000 will be expended for new construction, entailing new financing.

Motor buses are sharing in the program to the extent of $23,000,000, which is being expended for new bus equipment. The provision for power, too, is greater than in 1925, though below the figures of the previous three years.

This budget is the outcome of growth of a business that must furnish transportation to more than 16,000,000,000 persons annually. A better understanding of the utilities' problem has resulted in less competition and greater co-operation, current figures indicate.

Gas Companies Aid
Health Workers in War Against Foul Air

Executive heads of America's manufactured gas industry are waging a warfare against the smoke nuisance. They say that an average person consumes about six pounds of food and water a day. In addition to this he takes into his lungs 32 pounds of air each day.

Vast sums of money are spent to insure unpolluted water and a pure food supply, they say, but up to this time little attention has been paid to a pure air supply. Yet every day we use 32 pounds of air against a total of six pounds of food and water.

The medical profession seems to be agreed that air pollution from soft coal smoke is responsible for many of the diseases they are trying to combat. The effect is both direct and indirect. Possibly the worst is the indirect effect of partially cutting off the sunlight. This not only lowers the bodily resistance, but has a depressing effect on the individual's whole outlook on life.

The only solution to the smoke problem, with its attendant evils of soot, ashes and grime, is the universal use of gas fuel in the home and industry, according to engineers who have devoted years of study to the subject.

Adds Airplanes to Transit Facilities

Philadelphia.—Making good on its claim that it is in the transportation business—not the electric railway business—the Philadelphia Rapid Transit company has added airplanes to its equipment. Scheduled flights are made between this city and Washington and Norfolk, Va.

Protest Street Cleaning
Chicago.—Recommendations were made recently to the Chicago city council by Aldermen Meyerling and McKinlay, that the surface lines be relieved of the $400,000 annual payments to the city for cleaning streets between trolley rails. The ordinance providing for such payments is said to be a relic of horse-car days.

Electricity, the Restorer
(Editorial, Chicago American.)
The electric age, just starting, will wipe out the debts of the last great war, as the steam age saved Europe after Waterloo.

Production of electric power in gigantic units will make this nation rich beyond the dreams of today's petty millionaires and billionaires.

In the first six months of the year the United States produced more than 24,000,000 tons of steel, a record-breaking output.

Prosperity hasn't started, and our troubles exist only in the minds of the timid.

Our National Efficiency

PRESENT cost levels are much higher than those of ten years ago, so that each additional telephone installed now increases the average investment per telephone. To maintain the service the company's revenues must keep pace with this condition.

Keeping Young

By Mrs. Insull
Women age because they let their minds atrophy. A recent experience will illustrate.

A friend of former years, whom I had not seen for some time, and I had a reunion. We were worlds apart I found after a short time together.

She had remained practically stationary in so far as her mental activities were concerned. This thing shocked her and that thing shocked her.

They were not shocking things—simply progress in the world of events. She just didn't keep abreast of things. Rather than exert herself she found it easier to condemn. And, as is invariably the case, she was old physically and mentally. I firmly believe the eternal springs of youth are in the mind. The sluggish, undeveloped mind, slow moving body are companions as an almost invariable rule. If the mentality works, the organic demands are met. If your mind is active your body will be.

The mind, being active, will take into consideration food requirements, and over eating will be eliminated from the daily course.

The alert mind is alive to all the other requirements of sane living, and it will direct the practice of them. The mind controls the physical state entirely.

Your mentality colors your life in its every phase. Your appreciations, enthusiasms, emotions, are not directed by your hands and your feet, but by the brain. Consequently, the mind is the thing to cultivate and to be kept constantly exercised.

Beauty is not outline of feature; it is the emotion that colors the individual that makes her beautiful. I know women who might be considered homely were they without the vitality of mind and the warmth of emotion that transforms them into outstandingly attractive beings. You know them. We all know them. Duse was beautiful after the beauty of flesh was gone. The spirit was there until the end. Pavlova does not dance with her feet and her body alone. She dances with her mind. physical beauty will not carry one to the pinnacle. It is imagination, capacity, mentality that does that.

Naturally one with mentality would look as well as she could. She would not neglect her face, her hair, her body. But there are women who let their minds atrophy in the pursuit of physical and dress perfection. It is a futile spending of time, for in the long run, it is not the way to preserve the spirit of youth. A certain type of society woman there is who goes to every couturier, to see every model, and who spends endless hours fighting with this system and that to improve the contour of face and form. It is necessary to be pictorial, but all one's thoughts should not be dedicated to being it.

Clothes are an accessory to the fact—not the fact. One's mind should dominate the clothes, not clothes dominate the mind.

At 40 there is a certain outline, stamped in the course of nature, that cannot be interfered with. Face-lifting and other modern devices of the beauty surgeon cannot change that.

No one is deceived by the synthetic beauty but the synthetic beauty herself. Every stage has its development. Youth has tremendous beauty. When the bloom of youth is gone there is the ripe fruition of years and experiences to take its place.

I believe in meeting exigencies as well as possible, but not in trying to achieve the impossible, which I think a woman is doing when she puts her all in the battle for youth which must be lost in the end.

Christ Schram died Thursday evening, Jan. 6 at the age of 77 years at the home of his son Henry of Wilton Center after a prolonged illness and still death was unexpected and sudden. Mr. and Mrs. Schram were former Frankfort residents. After retiring from the farm making their home here in the village until death took Mrs. Schram several years ago. Since that time Mr. Schram has made his home among the children. Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon at 1 o'clock at from the home of his son Henry from there to St. Peters Evangelical Church at Frankfort, from there to Pleasant Hill Cemetery. The LAMPS You Use Should "Fit" Your Lighting Circuit

THE question of "fit" in lamps is important. To insure 100% lighting value for your money, the lamp must be designed for the same voltage as the lighting circuit in your home.

For example, a lamp only half strong enough for your circuit, will burn out in forty minutes. A lamp twice as strong as your circuit requires might last many years but would give you only a fourth of the light you should have.

Special Note:

The recent reduction in electric rates and the use of efficient lamps permit you to enjoy better lighting without increasing your lighting budget.

The "Lamp Exchange Service" of this Company is maintained to furnish tested high-efficiency lamps, so that its customers may obtain the full benefit of your electric service.

A lamp display in our store shows conveniently the many sizes, shapes and colors available for your use. Call in and see it.

GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

Henry of Navarre

A COUNTRY boy—long rather than tall, high of forehead, with a great hooked beak of a nose, a tanned face and wiry frame—came up to Paris, against his mother's will, one day in the latter part of the sixteenth century. He was the penniless Prince Henry of Bourbon, son of stupid old Antony of Bourbon, king of Navarre. In coming to Paris he was walking into the very jaws of death.

Catherine de Medici, widow of Henry II, was practically ruler of France in spite of the fact that her weak son, Charles IX sat on the throne. She had four sons. They were all childless. Should they chance to die without direct heirs, the royal line of Valois would end, and the crown must pass, by succession, to their cousin, the king of Navarre. Catherine was an ardent Catholic, as were her sons and her adherents. Navarre, a little subsidiary province near the Spanish frontier of France, was the center of the Huguenot (Protestant) movement. The rulers of Navarre were the chiefs of the Huguenots. Hence, if the king of Navarre should inherit the throne, France would probably become a Huguenot country. So Catherine cast uneasy eyes towards the little kingdom and began to plot measures for averting such a possibility.

Jeanne d'Albret, wife of Antony de Bourbon and mother of young Henry of Navarre, was also doing some plotting, but along wholly different lines. She was one of the noblest, best women in history. Her husband had been a weak, dissipated, thick-headed fellow, and all her hopes were centered in her boy. She accordingly had Henry brought up as a rigid Protestant, sought to turn his mind to high thoughts, to honor and personal rectitude, urged him to outdoor life and exposure to toughen and strengthen him, and confided his military training to the famous Admiral Coligny.

In the midst of this course of training Jeanne was horrified to receive a request from Catherine that Henry visit the gay court at Paris. She well knew that such an invitation amounted to a royal command, and that it could not with impunity be disobeyed. Yet she foresaw the terrible influences a woman like Catherine could exert on her pleasure-loving son. Henry, delighted to be free from such close discipline, hurried to Paris and plunged at once into the dissolute gaiety of the court. Jeanne in vain tried to retain her influence over him by writing him long letters full of advice and of news of his old home. Catherine dreaded the effect of these letters, so she sent Jeanne a pair of poisoned gloves. Jeanne wore them and died.

Every decent influence being thus removed, Henry wallowed deeper daily in the infamies of Catherine's contrivance. He was now king of Navarre, nominal head of the Huguenots, but too steeped in the pleasures of court to give much thought to his responsibilities. To wipe out the Huguenots Catherine arranged the massacre of St. Bartholomew within a week after Henry's marriage to her daughter Margaret. Henry, seeing his life was in danger, renounced Protestantism and became a Catholic. Three years later he escaped from Paris, where he was treated more like a prisoner than a king, and fled to Navarre, where his Huguenot adherents were awaiting him. On the way he stopped long enough to renounce Catholicism and declare himself a faithful Huguenot. For the next few years he indulged in as gay a life as his impoverished little kingdom could afford.

Meantime, on Charles IX's death, his younger brother, Henry III, had come to the throne of France. He was frivolous and weak. The Parisians worshiped the duke of Guise, who openly declared himself a claimant to the throne and who started the League, an organization semi-civil, semi-religious, made up from all classes and devoted to the Guise family. Henry III, to check this rising revolt, had Guise assassinated. The League in fury rose to avenge its leader's death and drove the king out of Paris. The dispossessed monarch joined forces with Henry of Navarre against the League, but was himself assassinated in 1589. This left Henry of Navarre rightful king of France.

Henry boldly laid siege to Paris to enforce his claims. He beat the League's armies at Arques in 1589 and at Ivry in 1590. Henry was tired of warfare and poverty. He wanted to be a king, not a guerilla leader. So he abjured Protestantism and for the second time declared himself a true Catholic. This removed the last barrier to his success and all France gladly acclaimed him king.

So in 1593 he entered Paris in triumph, apparently in no way gashed at having twice deceived his earlier followers by such ready changes of faith. He drove the Spanish out of France, put down the League, and in 1598, by the edict of Nantes, assured privilege and religious toleration to all Protestants. Under him modern France had its birth. He ruled wisely and for the good of the people.

At the height of his career, May 14, 1610, he was murdered by Ravaillac, a fanatic, his young son, Louis XIII, succeeding him.

THE CHRISTIAN'S USE OF HIS BIBLE

LESSON TEXT—Deut. 6:4-9; II Tim. 3:14-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Best Book in the World.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Studying our Marching Orders.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Read and Study the Bible.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How to Get Help From the Bible.

I. God's Instructions to Israel as to the Use of the Scriptures (Deut. 6:4-9).

1. The central truths to be taught (vv. 4, 5).

(1) The unity of God (v. 4).

"The Lord our God is one Lord." This was a testimony against the polytheism existing among the Gentiles of that day.

(2) Man's supreme obligation (v. 5).

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, soul and might." God should be loved with all the heart, soul and might because He is the alone and supreme God. This being the first and great commandment, we know what is man's supreme duty.

2. How these truths are to be kept alive (vv. 6-9).

"These words which I command thee this day shall be in thine heart." In order that God's Word might be in the heart they were enjoined—

(1) To teach them diligently unto thy children (v. 7).

The most important part of a child's education is that given in the home in the Word of God.

(2) "Shall talk of them when thou sittest in thine house" (v. 7).

This is the right kind of home life.

(3) Shall talk of them when walking with our children and friends (v. 7).

What more interesting, important and uplifting topic upon which to converse with our friends.

(4) Shall talk of them when retiring for the night (v. 7).

The last thing upon which the mind should rest before going to sleep should be God and His truth.

(5) Talk of them when rising in the morning (v. 7).

How fitting that God should speak to us through His Word the first thing when we awake.

(6) "Bind them upon thine hand for a sign" (v. 8).

This was literally done by the Jews as portions of the Scriptures were worn upon their wrists.

(7) "They shall be as frontlets between thine eyes" (v. 8).

This also was literally done by the Jews even to wearing portions of the Scriptures in little boxes between eyes.

(8) "Thou shalt write them on the posts of thy house and on thy gates" (v. 9). They were to be constantly before their eyes.

II. Paul's Instruction to Timothy as to the Scriptures (II Tim. 3:14-17).

In this chapter Paul makes clear to Timothy that perilous times would come. False teachers would arise within the church and lead astray sentimental and unsuspecting people as neurotic women. People professing godliness would deny its power by godless living. So awful will this condition be that those who live godly lives shall suffer persecution. Paul's own life of suffering was an example of what fidelity and testimony would bring. In the last days he predicts that this attitude on the part of these false teachers would be intensified, for "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse."

In the face of such trying circumstances Paul exhorts Timothy—

1. To remain steadfast, to abide in the eternal truths which had been taught to him (v. 14).

He assures him that though trying times would come and violent storms of opposition would beat heavily upon him, Timothy would find the Word of God an abiding, unshaken foundation. The Holy Scriptures will abide even when heaven and earth have passed away; therefore the necessary thing is to abide in them.

2. The knowledge furnished by the Word of God was sufficient for the perplexing and trying times through which he was to pass (v. 15). The Bible furnishes wisdom which can be found in no other place. This wisdom, as all true wisdom, leads straight to Jesus Christ, who gives salvation.

3. The Scriptures are inspired of God (v. 16).

Inspiration here means "God breathed." Because of this fact they should be held with confidence.

Abiding in the Scriptures will perfectly equip the minister for his work (v. 17).

How Jesus Saw Men

Jesus divided men into two classes and no more; either on the narrow or on the broad way; either a good tree or a bad tree; either a wise or a foolish builder; in a word, either for Christ or against Him.—Plummer.

Service

The quality of the service is the measure of the result. It is not length of service, but intensity, sincerity, enthusiasm that tells.—R. J. Campbell.

Daddy's
Evening
Fairy Tale
by MARY GRAHAM BONNER

GEORGE'S GIFTS

These were the gifts that were given to George when he was awakened by the three little men who roused him by playing to him on their brass trumpets.

They had heard that George liked to be generous to himself, and that he liked to allow himself plenty of sleep, and that he wished he had more than one mouth so he could eat more than he now could.

Oh, he wanted a great deal, and he felt as though he would like to be ever and ever and ever so generous to himself.

George didn't take any time when the little men told him to get out of bed.

"We're going to help you," they said. "And they led him to the most amazing place he had ever seen in his life. It was filled with everything."

Not just toys and animals and brownies and people, but with extra noses all laid on neat shelves and extra legs and arms and mouths and eyes. And of course there was a pantry filled with no end of food, and there were toys and animals as well.

"You are ambitious," they said to George, "and we want to help you."

"So we're going to give you an extra nose. Then you will be able to discover where all the wild strawberries are to be found and you will smell an orchard miles away."

"We are going to give you an extra set of arms and then you can reach for things at the table without being noticed for your usual two arms can stay in place."

"We are going to give you two months for then you can eat twice as much."

"And we are going to give you two extra ears so you can hear more than others and can even tell when the neighboring town is having a band concert or a circus parade."

"We are going to give you an extra brain for thinking up more things you might want, and we are going to give you two extra eyes for seeing more things you otherwise might not see and which you might wish to have."

"We are going to give you two extra legs so you can get to places much more quickly and thence see and enjoy so much more."

"We are going to give you twice the amount of time for sleeping so when you are called in the morning you need not pay even the slightest bit of attention for you will know you have the time again you have had in sleeping."

"Soon your family will realize this."

"We are going to give you twice the amount of time in which to play."

"Oh," said George finally, "this is almost too much."

"Oh no," said the little trumpet men, "only twice as much as most have. That can't be too much."

"No," agreed George, "I think that's all right."

"Good," said the little trumpet men, "we're so glad you agree."

"And now for fixing you up."

They put two extra arms just under where George's arms now were.

The put two legs alongside his other legs as he did not want to walk on all fours like an animal. They pressed something into his head which they said was an extra set of thoughts and they put on the additional ears and attached two more eyes, and one mouth right above the other.

They told him that he would find the sleeping time and the waking time would all be taken care of without any mistake.

Well, he took a look at himself in a long mirror.

He didn't look so strangely as he thought he might look.

Of course he looked unusual. But then that was all right. He was unusual. And how superior he would be with twice as much as any one else had just in his very own self.

Then the three trumpet men began to blow their trumpets again and these words came forth:

"Go on George, go on George, go on George. Now you can make use of everything."

Knew Where He Was

Sonny had disappeared from the yard where he had been playing. After an hour of frantic search he was discovered looking in a shop window far from home.

"Why, Sonny, whatever made you wander off like that?" asked his mother.

"We were nearly frightened to death about you."

"There wasn't nothin' to be scared about," said Sonny. "Why, I knew right where I was all the time!"

Winsome Fashions
for Little FolksSimpler Models Vie With Gay, Bouffant Frocks to Delight Sub-Deb.

At this time of year every woman of fashion and every other woman who is the mother of girls, big or little, is concerned with the wardrobe of her children. It is a matter of moment, the outfit that is being prepared; perhaps as important as the question of dress will ever in youth present, says a fashion authority in the New York Times. That is, from the juvenile point of view, which is one of more sophistication than perhaps the girls of a former generation knew; and every budding belle of today learns soon all about her type and what is the mode and what she prefers. Comparisons are potent factors, and the feminine experience of rivalry comes early to stimulate ambition and to prompt the young lady in making her decisions. Not to be in style is something not to be endured, and pretty clothes were long ago found to be the most direct way to the heart of a girl.

Styles for children reflect in a measure those for their elders and in some ways the frocks that little girls are wearing are in some features really miniature models copied after those in the collections of both French and American designers. They are more feminine, with full gathered, plaited or tiered skirts; new kinds of sleeves, new necklines, much shirring, flouncing, needlework and fine detail, all of which contributes to a dainty finished quality in dress. That the manner of dressing a girl from babyhood to her teens has changed with the years is evident in the fashions.

The well-dressed young girl of today is neither as much of a baby nor as mature and overdressed as one in varying former years. She is simply different, illustrating different standards and conventions. Even a tiny girl is not now beruffled and beribboned in frocks that were overelaborated with lace and embroidery. Simplicity is apparent in good style and good taste, though it is often a costly simplicity. Clothes of the better sort are handmade if they are of light fabrics, and almost all sorts have at least a touch of needlework. Some of the newest and most attractive things in soft frocks for girls from the age of five to fifteen and more are much embroidered in one way and another—fine French embroidery, Italian drawwork combined with embroidery and the present needlework patterns which are so strikingly decorative.

White for Midwinter Season.

Much white is shown for the midwinter season, much all-white in both dresses and wraps, and some that is ornamented with needlework in the gayest colors. Crewel embroideries done in the patterns from the Balkan states, together with cross-stitch and hemstitching in color, are all shown on the season's models, in both white and in colors. Colors in the clothes for children forecast something of the styles for a season ahead, an assortment of the most lovely shades. These are very important, for they present some distinct achievements in the art of dyeing and are known by names that are most intriguing. Not any one color or even a certain few are conspicuously fashionable, for they are many.

For winter the browns, reds, blues and greens in numerous new shades are shown, with perhaps more brown and red than any others in response to the needs of the season. Wool brown, seal, tobacco, snuff and the light shades that are known as acorn, bark, pigskin, sirup, sawdust and polo tan are much used for both the one-piece frocks, suits and coats. In red there are many shades—burgundy, bordeaux, claret, Indian, troubadour and lobster. There are forest, spruce, fairway, almond sage, mignon and lido green, and festive shades of different sorts known as marigold, heart o' melon, meadow pink, sunbloss, begonia, parakeet and crocus. Blue appears to be having a revival in clothes for children as for grown-ups, and most lovely shades are shown under the titles of bluebird, Italian turquoise, crayon, Flemish blue, French blue, glacier, and for practical frocks, radio, sindbad, sailor and dark navy blue.

Shops, particularly those that deal most in unusual things for children, are offering as the top note of the season the smocked frock for girls of all sizes. It is usually in one piece, with the yoke, girdle and cuffs fitted by the stitching, which is done in the same or in a contrasting color. A dark-blue crepe de chine for a girl of ten is smocked in scarlet floss, forming a yoke both at the neck and at the waist to a line over the hips. Below the fullness of the skirt is laid in narrow plaits and the wide sleeves smocked at the wrist are left to ruffle over the hand. This model, made in brown, green, tan and in red, is a practical, comfortable and always chic little frock that is suitable for many occasions. In the pretty light shades or in white, smocked in colors, sometimes with embroidery introduced, it serves charmingly for dancing school, the matinee and many informal daytime parties.

Jersey for Everyday Frock.

Jersey is the answer to the everyday frock for a girl of almost any age and, this season, is much used for very little ones. In the smallest sizes it is usually cut in one piece, rather roomy, with shirring at the neck and the wrists of full sleeves. Bloomers made of the same goods are made to just peep below the dress. Dresses for larger girls are more complex, with inlays and sections of material, either the same or in a contrast. Plaids are very good this season, not as much the large fancy plaids as the traditional tartans used alone or combined with plain goods.

A stylish little everyday frock for a girl between the years of eight and twelve is made of the new checked and plain velveteen. A straight jumper blouse of the plain goods has a shirt-bosom front, Byron collar and cuffs of the check of which the box-plaited skirt is made. A distinctive detail is the raglan line of the shoulders and a finished appearance is given to the outfit with narrow ribbon tie at the neck. Wool plaid is used for a smart frock that closes at the neck with a narrow linen collar and is buttoned down the front. The material is cut to present the plaid diagonally in the frock itself and a width of the goods sewn around the bottom of the skirt terminates to form deep pockets in front. With this dress is worn a narrow belt of black patent leather, black patent pumps and a tam of black velvet.

For Afternoon and Evening.

Afternoon and evening dress for girls is more pretentious than it has been for several years. In the more substantial materials, velvet, satin, taffeta and crepe are shown. Some of the designs are ultramodern, some are quaint period frocks. Taffeta is used for an evening dress made after a French conception, in cameo-pink taffeta, with skirt gathered full, and a large cape-collar attached to a plain bodice. A wide band of pink tulle borders both the skirt and the cape. A crepe satin dancing frock in a lovely shade of yellow is sleeveless, with a round neck in the bodice which blouses slightly over the hips. Metal lace and panne velvet are put together in a clever design in an evening dress for a girl of sixteen or older, the bodice and underskirt being made of the lace and the panier overskirt of velvet is draped in the striking manner of Louisa Boulanger, ending in a bow at the back. Lace, both in the silk and metallized is used in some exceedingly pretty dance frocks, with velvet or silk ribbon feather trimming and fur. A silk dress of pale-blue georgette has a sleeveless, round neck yoke of silver-threaded lace. The short full-gathered skirt is attached to the blouse with three rows of blue velvet ribbon with a bow and ends at one side and the bottom of the skirt is finished with a band of white fur.

A dark-blue crepe de chine for a girl of ten is smocked in scarlet floss, forming a yoke both at the neck and at the waist to a line over the hips. Below the fullness of the skirt is laid in narrow plaits and the wide sleeves smocked at the wrist are left to ruffle over the hand. This model, made in brown, green, tan and in red, is a practical, comfortable and always chic little frock that is suitable for many occasions. In the pretty light shades or in white, smocked in colors, sometimes with embroidery introduced, it serves charmingly for dancing school, the matinee and many informal daytime parties.

Jersey for Everyday Frock.

Jersey is the answer to the everyday frock for a girl of almost any age and, this season, is much used for very little ones. In the smallest sizes it is usually cut in one piece, rather roomy, with shirring at the neck and the wrists of full sleeves. Bloomers made of the same goods are made to just peep below the dress. Dresses for larger girls are more complex, with inlays and sections of material, either the same or in a contrast. Plaids are very good this season, not as much the large fancy plaids as the traditional tartans used alone or combined with plain goods.

A stylish little everyday frock for a girl between the years of eight and twelve is made of the new checked and plain velveteen. A straight jumper blouse of the plain goods has a shirt-bosom front, Byron collar and cuffs of the check of which the box-plaited skirt is made. A distinctive detail is the raglan line of the shoulders and a finished appearance is given to the outfit with narrow ribbon tie at the neck. Wool plaid is used for a smart frock that closes at the neck with a narrow linen collar and is buttoned down the front. The material is cut to present the plaid diagonally in the frock itself and a width of the goods sewn around the bottom of the skirt terminates to form deep pockets in front. With this dress is worn a narrow belt of black patent leather, black patent pumps and a tam of black velvet.

For Afternoon and Evening.

Afternoon and evening dress for girls is more pretentious than it has been for several years. In the more substantial materials, velvet, satin, taffeta and crepe are shown. Some of the designs are ultramodern, some are quaint period frocks. Taffeta is used for an evening dress made after a French conception, in cameo-pink taffeta, with skirt gathered full, and a large cape-collar attached to a plain bodice. A wide band of pink tulle borders both the skirt and the cape. A crepe satin dancing frock in a lovely shade of yellow is sleeveless, with a round neck in the bodice which blouses slightly over the hips. Metal lace and panne velvet are put together in a clever design in an evening dress for a girl of sixteen or older, the bodice and underskirt being made of the lace and the panier overskirt of velvet is draped in the striking manner of Louisa Boulanger, ending in a bow at the back. Lace, both in the silk and metallized is used in some exceedingly pretty dance frocks, with velvet or silk ribbon feather trimming and fur. A silk dress of pale-blue georgette has a sleeveless, round neck yoke of silver-threaded lace. The short full-gathered skirt is attached to the blouse with three rows of blue velvet ribbon with a bow and ends at one side and the bottom of the skirt is finished with a band of white fur.

art of dyeing and are known by names that are most intriguing. Not any one color or even a certain few are conspicuously fashionable, for they are many.

For winter the browns, reds, blues and greens in numerous new shades are shown, with perhaps more brown and red than any others in response to the needs of the season. Wool brown, seal, tobacco, snuff and the light shades that are known as acorn, bark, pigskin, sirup, sawdust and polo tan are much used for both the one-piece frocks, suits and coats. In red there are many shades—burgundy, bordeaux, claret, Indian, troubadour and lobster. There are forest, spruce, fairway, almond sage, mignon and lido green, and festive shades of different sorts known as marigold, heart o' melon, meadow pink, sunbloss, begonia, parakeet and crocus. Blue appears to be having a revival in clothes for children as for grown-ups, and most lovely shades are shown under the titles of bluebird, Italian turquoise, crayon, Flemish blue, French blue, glacier, and for practical frocks, radio, sindbad, sailor and dark navy blue.

Shops, particularly those that deal most in unusual things for children, are offering as the top note of the season the smocked frock for girls of all sizes. It is usually in one piece, with the yoke, girdle and cuffs fitted by the stitching, which is done in the same or in a contrasting color. A dark-blue crepe de chine for a girl of ten is smocked in scarlet floss, forming a yoke both at the neck and at the waist to a line over the hips. PRECEDING CHAPTERS

Harry Ormerod, long proscribed traitor to King George as a Stuart partisan, returning from France to London rescues Alderman Robert Juggins from a band of assassins. Juggins proves to be the grandson of a former steward of Ormerod's father, to whom Juggins feels himself indebted. Ormerod tells Juggins he has abandoned the Stuart cause. Juggins informs Ormerod of a Jacobite plot in the American colonies to weaken England by forwarding French interests. At its head is Andrew Murray, a Scotsman, and a Frenchman, De Veulle, deadly enemy of Ormerod. The two are in London furthering their schemes. Anticipating the plotters' early return to America, Juggins arranges for Ormerod to go there with letters to Governor Burnet, friend of Juggins, and work to foil Murray. Disguised as Juggins' servant, Ormerod arranges to take passage to America.

"Why, a war for the right to grow and to flourish, a war for trade. At other times, mark you, nations clash over questions of honor or territory. So their statesmen say. Actually there is a question of trade or merchandise at the bottom of every war that has been fought since the world began. Today we are fighting with France for control of the trade of the Atlantic—and control of the Atlantic trade means control of the Western Plantations, America. We are fighting, Master Harry, with laws and tariffs and manufacturing skill and shipping instead of with men and deadly weapons.

"The country which wins the fur trade will win control over the greatest number of savages. And the country which is so placed, especially if it be England, will win the military struggle which some day will have to be fought for dominion in America.

So I would have you feel yourself a soldier, a general of trade, sent out upon a venture of great danger and importance. It may be, Master Harry, that you carry on your shoulders the future of England and of nations yet unborn."

"All that I can, I will do," I exclaimed.

"Good. I cannot ask more." He clasped my hand in a wringing grip. "Good luck to you, lad, and write as occasion serves."

He went over the side with his lips pursed as if to whistle and a look of doleful pleasure on his face. Him, too, as it happened, I was never to see again. In fact, I wonder whether I should not have leaped over the vessel's side at that moment had I realized how complete was to be the severance of my life from all that I had known before.

By the cabin entrance under the poop I found the seaman who had collected my scanty baggage. "Where do you berth?" he asked me, pausing at the foot of the ladder-stairs.

"With the second mate."

He opened the door on the right-hand, or starboard, side, revealing a space so tiny that I marvelled how two men could force themselves into it at once. Two short, shallow bunks occupied two-thirds of its area.

"Do all the passengers lodge aft here?" I asked him carelessly as he disposed of my trappings.

"All save the negro; he is to sleep in the galley behind the companion-way."

When he had gone I curled up in the lower bunk, which the second mate obviously had surrendered to me. At last I must have dozed, for I was awakened suddenly by the strangest of sounds—a woman's voice singing. It was a song I had never heard before, with a Scots accent to the words and a wonderful lilting melody that was somehow very sad and all the while it was pretending to merriment.

I rose from my bunk, and, stealing to the door, set it open, so that I might hear the better. I was so interested in the song and the singer's voice that I forgot even to watch the door of the cabin next to mine where she was singing. And judge to my surprise when she stepped into the passage, almost at my side.

Her surprise, as was but natural, was greater than mine. So we stood there a moment within a long yard of each other, gazing mutely into each other's eyes. Her face, flower-white in the dim light that came down the companionway, had a sweetness of expression that belied the proud carriage of her head and an air of hauteur such as I had seen about the great ladies of King Louis's court. Her hair was black and all blown in little wisps that curled at her forehead and neck. Her eyes were dark, too.

"I heard you singing," I said.

She turned and made to re-enter her cabin. But I raised my hand involuntarily in a gesture of appeal.

"I am sorry," I went on quickly. "I did not mean to be rude. I—I could not help it."

She regarded me gravely, evidently puzzled by the incongruousness of my voice and my plowboy garments.

"You are never Scots, sir?" she answered finally.

"No, but I know Scotland."

A light dawned in her eyes with the words.

"Ah, then you will be knowing the song that I sang! 'Lochaber No More' 'tis called, and a bitter lament of exiles out of their own homeland."

"No, I never heard it before—but I have a brother buried on a hillside far north of Lochaber, in the Clan Donald country."

The sorrow that came into her face was beautiful to see. None but a person who had Gaelic blood could have sympathized so instantly and so generously with a stranger's grief.

"That will have been the great sadness upon you," she cried in the odd way that the Highland Scots have of using English. "Oh, sir, your woe will have been deep! So far from his own home!"

"Yes," I assented; "and he an exile, too."

"An exile?"

She leaned toward me, her eyes like stars.

"You will be one of the Good People!"

I did not answer her, too confused in my wits to know what to say; and suddenly my confusion spread to her.

"It is wild I am talking, sir," she exclaimed. "Never heed my words. Sure, who would be trusting his heart's blood to the stranger that stepped in his path?"

"I think I would trust mine to you," I answered boldly.

She smiled faintly.

"From your manner you would be no Englishman, sir, saying such pretty things without consideration."

"I have been long out of England."

"Then your sorrow will not be so great for parting with all you have held dear. Lucky is your lot."

"You have never been to America?" I asked.

"I had never been out of Scotland until I came south to take ship today. Ah, sir, there is a great sorrow at my heart for the country I love."

We said nothing while you might have counted ten, and in the silence she looked away from me.

"And you go with us to New York?" I asked fatuously.

Her eyes danced with a glint of humor.

"Pray, sir, will there be any other shipping-place in the ocean?"

I laughed.

"My name," I began—and then I stopped abruptly.

My name at present was William

Juggins, and I had a feeling of reluctance at practicing deceit upon this girl at our first meeting. But she saved me from my quandary.

"You will not be what you seem, sir," she said gravely. "That I can see, and perhaps you will not think me indiscreet if I say so much."

"'Tis true," I assented eagerly. "Indeed—"

"But you will be meeting my—" she hesitated ever so little—"my father presently, no doubt, and he will make us known to one another. Now I must go on deck."

And she walked by me with a faint swish of skirts that sounded like an echo of far-off fairy music.

Her father! Who could he be? And then realization smote me.

Plainly, she could not be De Veulle's daughter—nor Captain Abbot's. She was Murray's.

Murray's daughter! I rebelled against the idea. It could not be. It ought not to be. What right had he to a daughter—and such a maid as this? 'Twas absurd! Manifestly absurd!

Why, I must hate the man. I had no other recourse. And he had a daughter! And above all, this daughter!

When I came on deck the next morning we were driving down-channel before a smart northwest wind. Murray stood by the weather rail with the negro, who I learned afterward was called Tom, at his elbow. As I emerged from the companionway Tom leaned forward and whispered something to his master. Murray walked straight across the deck to my side, his eyes fastened upon my face.

"How, now, Master Juggins," he said heartily, his hand outstretched, "and did you leave your good uncle—or is it cousin?—well?"

I perceived that he took me for the lout I was dressed to represent, and strove to play up to the disguise.

"Well enough, sir," I answered sullenly, shifting clownishly from foot to foot.

"'Tis good!" he exclaimed. "Faith I am vastly relieved. I have a warm regard for honest Robert Juggins. He has spoken of me, perhaps?"

The question, designed to catch my simple mentality unawares, gave me considerable amusement.

"Oh, ay," I muttered.

"We have been rivals in our ventures, as you doubtless know," continued Murray.

"But he doesn't take it seriously, sir," I assured him gravely.

"Eh? What's that?"

"He laughs about it, sir."

And I giggled at him stupidly. After a moment's inspection of my countenance he seemed constrained to accept the remark as witless innocence, for a grim light of humor appeared in his eyes.

"Laughs, does he? Zooks, I might have known it. He is a merry soul, Robert Juggins, and I should like to see him footing a morris to a right merry tune. Mayhap we shall see it some day. Who knows?"

"Who knows, sir?" I repeated vacantly.

"And you are to cast your fortunes in America, lad? You may count upon my good offices in New York. Faith, I shall be glad to do a favor if I can, for Robert Juggins' nephew—or did you say cousin?"

"I am—"

But he saved me from the lie.

"Ah, here is come one of our fellow passengers," he interrupted.

I turned to see De Veulle approaching us.

"'Tis a French gentleman," pursued Murray, bent upon winning my confidence with his easy manners and glib tongue, "on his way to Canada. Ha, chevalier, meet a young countryman of mine, Master Juggins—the Chevalier de Veulle."

All unsuspecting, De Veulle made me a slight bow, a look of indifferent disdain on his face at sight of my plebeian figure. The disguise was good, and I hoped I might cozen him for a time at least. But no man forgets another who has toyed with his life, and his indifference was dissipated the instant his eye met mine.

"Juggins?" he exclaimed in bewilderment. "Parbleu! 'Tis Harry Ormerod, the Jacobite refugee!"

Murray snapped his fingers to Tom, the negro, who had been a silent witness to our conversation. In an instant he stood beside us.

"Is this the man who came with Master Juggins to the hearing before the lords of trade?" snapped Murray.

"He de man, massa."

"You are sure?"

"Yes, massa."

Ormerod is to be brought to a realization of the treachery of which a man of "honor," led by overweening ambition, can be capable.

Travesty on Coffee Served by Javanese

Java coffee is renowned the world over—in the bean. In the cup, as served in the Dutch tropical possessions, it is a frightful travesty on coffee, writes Samuel G. Blythe in the Saturday Evening Post.

They roast the bean until it is almost burned, and grind it. Then they let water drip through it or employ some other occult process, and produce a black, thick, acrid mixture they call coffee essence. This is served cold in a little pitcher, with a larger pitcher of hot water. The plot is to pour some of the essence into your cup, fill the cup with the hot water and revel in the murky combination.

It doesn't taste like coffee. It tastes like some sort of chemical solution used for cleaning rugs. That is a detail. There isn't a good cupful of coffee, or a cupful of good coffee, to be had outside of the United States anywhere in this world, so why impeach the Dutchman's idea of the brew?

Write Your Own Telegrams

The telerograph service is now being added to the state telegraph system of France and one can now transmit a telegram in his own handwriting to all the leading French towns. The service is not only useful for sentimental but practical purposes, as the courts will probably accept a signature sent by wire as legal.

FRENCH COOKING

There is much to be said for starting at least one meal a day with a good hot nourishing soup. The following are a few culled from French cuisine:

Chestnut Soup.—Put into a saucepan a cupful of shelled chestnuts. Cook on a slow fire without boiling for half an hour, then remove the brown skin. Put the chestnuts into a mortar with a slice of dry bread and pound to a paste, adding a little bouillon to soften the bread from time to time. Pass through a strainer, add bouillon and cook for another half hour. Serve with croutons.

Onion Soup.—Peel six large onions, cut into thin slices. Cook lightly in butter. When partially browned add a tablespoonful of flour and continue cooking until the mixture is brown. Add water, salt and pepper and cook for a half hour or until the onions are tender. Strain if desired and serve on toast with grated cheese.

Pot au Feu.—The meat used is a piece of stew or shoulder or leg. Many cooks think the addition of the bones and feet of a chicken add the finest flavor. Cover with cold water and simmer for two hours, skimming once or twice. Now add vegetables such as carrots, turnips, parsnips, leeks and onions, with a sprig of thyme, a clove of garlic and two bay leaves with a stalk of celery. Cabbage and potatoes, too, may be added. Add a little kitchen bouquet to give a brown color. Serve very hot when the vegetables are cooked.

Chicken Bouillon.—Take a pound of stewing meat, and an old rooster or lean pullet, cut into small pieces, cover with cold water and simmer; when it has begun to simmer add seasoning—an onion stuck with cloves, a few herbs and carrots and turnips cut into bits. Cook until the meat is very tender. Drain and serve.

Food for the Family.

For those who like the filling but do not eat pastry try the filling in cups.

Pumpkin Pie in Cups.—Put a rim of pastry around custard cups after filling them with pumpkin pulp and bake as usual.

Cranberry Ice.—Cook cranberries as for sauce and strain them, add an equal amount of sugar sirup and freeze. Make the sirup by boiling two cupfuls of sugar with one-half cupful of water. Cool and add to the juice. Freeze and serve in cups.

Turkey Giblet Soup.—Chop the cooked giblets fine, then put through a coarse sieve. Thicken the liquor in which the giblets were cooked with a little butter and flour cooked together, then add cream to the giblets and brown stock to make the quantity desired.

Chestnut Stuffing.—Blanch a pound of Italian chestnuts, boil until tender and put through the ricer. Add one cupful of bread crumbs, one-half cupful of shortening, one tablespoonful of poultry seasoning, a half cupful of raisins, salt, celery, pepper and cayenne to taste.

Cabbage Salad.—Shred a firm white head of cabbage and dress with cream, add a dash of vinegar and sugar to taste with a bit of salt.

Eggs Marchesa.—Butter muffin tins and set upon the stove to warm. In the bottom of each put a teaspoonful of soft bread crumbs, add a dessert spoonful of milk, then a fresh egg carefully broken, season with salt, paprika and pepper. Over this drop a lump of butter, more bread crumbs and a little grated cheese. Bake in a moderate oven for ten minutes. They should be a golden brown and when a knife is run around the edge and they are turned out on a hot platter, they look like brown puff balls.

A hot egg sandwich is most appetizing for a quick lunch. Fry a little onion in butter until the onion is light yellow, then drop in an egg. Cook until done, put onto a piece of hot buttered bread, cover with another and serve.

Rochester Jelly Cake.—Cream two-thirds of a cupful of butter, add two cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of milk, and three cupfuls of flour and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Beat well, and to one-third of the batter add one tablespoonful of molasses, one cupful of chopped raisins dusted with one tablespoonful of flour, one-fourth pound of sliced citron, one-half teaspoonful each of nutmeg and allspice, and two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon. Bake the plain batter in two layers and the spiced fruit batter in one, placing the fruit layer between the two plain layers and put together with jelly or marmalade.

Make Ready Now for Gardening

Never Too Soon to Get Equipment Ready for Growing Early Plants.

The vegetable gardening department at Cornell says that everything should be made ready to grow early plants long before the equipment is really needed. The equipment includes plenty of good soil, flats, pots, spotting boards, hot bed sash, mats to protect the frames, and manure suited for hot bed use.

Equipment Short Lived.

All of these things are exposed constantly to warmth and moisture when they are used, and so have a short life at best. Flats may need re-glazing, sash possibly should be re-glazed, and other small items of carpentry be done to good advantage.

Soil for growing plants should be well mixed and screened so that lumps, stone and trash are removed. Soil too rich tends to produce plants which are spindly and thus easily susceptible to damping-off disease. Compost consisting of well-rotted manure, loam, and sand added makes a good mixture. The sand keeps the soil from baking and crusting and will prevent puddling when the soil is watered.

Spacing Device Helps.

A device for spacing the plants in the flats or beds is a labor saver for transplanting seedling plants. The state college uses spotting boards with pegs spaced one and a half by one and a half and two by two inches. This device can be made of pine lumber by any one. "Cut a board of three-fourths inch material the length and width of your flats," says the college. "Drill five-eighths-inch holes in this board the desired distance apart (one and a half by one and a half or two by two inches) and into these holes set pegs tapered down to one-fourth inch diameter at the tip. Cleats nailed on the ends will insure even spacing of the spotting board provided all your flats are of the same size. In one operation you firm the soil and mark the flat with a series of holes evenly spaced to receive the seedling. Even spacing in the flat gives more uniform growth of the seedlings, and the straight rows aid in cultivating the seedlings."

Use of Rotted Manure for Enrichment of Soil

Rotted manure has its place in certain forms of soil enrichment but it should be remembered that manure cannot rot without a distinct loss in fertility elements. A ton of rotten manure may represent anywhere from a ton and a half to two tons of fresh manure, depending on how long the rotting has been going on. For the quick starting and rapid growth of trucking crops farm waste in well-rotted form is commercially helpful since a few days' difference in getting the truck to market may make a great difference in the price received for it. But in the case of dairy and general farming the best place for manure to rot is under the soil. The fertility elements which the rotting releases are then taken up by plant roots or otherwise conserved. There is never any loss when manure rots underground.

Attention to New Rams Will Prove Profitable

A little attention to the new rams may be very profitable both from the standpoint of the individual and the attention given. A large percentage of rams which change hands during the fall go direct from the raisers and fitters to the farm flock owner. Sheep on the average farm are usually considered a side line, and sometimes receive very little attention.

The rams need flesh and should be purchased in good breeding condition, not overlooking the conformation and make-up. As a rule breeding animals are thin and underfed, a condition which should not exist.

Some breeders discriminate against a heavy fleece on the ram, and it is indeed burdensome if he lugs it around during the breeding season. This difficulty, however, can easily be remedied by clipping the ram at breeding time.

FARM FACTS

Sweet clover makes old land young again.

A one-crop country is never prosperous.

Alfalfa is the oldest plant to have been cultivated for forage alone.

The necessity of light work or active daily exercise for the brood mare must be stressed.

Cranking a tractor while it's in gear is just another way of saying, "I didn't know it was loaded."

Lime increases the yield of corn and many other crops 20 per cent, experiment station records show.

Alfalfa seed from Turkestan and Africa has been added to Italian red clover seed as unsuited to plant in most of the United States and must be dyed before being sold in this country.

Keep in Trim!

Good Elimination Is Essential to Good Health.

THE kidneys are the blood filters. If they fail to function properly there is apt to be a retention of toxic poisons in the blood. A dull, languid feeling and, sometimes, toxic backaches, headaches, and dizziness are symptoms of this condition. Further evidence of improper kidney function is often found in burning or scanty passage of secretions. Each year more and more people are learning the value of Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic, in this condition. Scarcely a nook or hamlet anywhere but has many enthusiastic users. Ask your neighbor.

Barber Philatelist

A London barber spends all his odd moments collecting stamps, and the walls of his shop are papered with stamps of all descriptions. He is also an art critic, his advice being sought when a person desires to purchase what is claimed to be a valuable picture.

Has Two Claims to Fame.

Dr. Harvey, who discovered the circulation of the blood, is said to have been the first coffee drinker in England.

Gas Measurement
Needs Skins From Untroubled Sheep

Peaceful sheep and gas meters. Between the two there seems to be no connection, and yet the successful operation of the gas meter requires that its bellows be made from unblemished sheep skins. Sheep who have suffered from skin diseases, abrasions, or have been scratched by thorns or barbed wire will not produce skins of the quality required for the measurement of gas. Australia and New Zealand produce better sheep skins than do America, meter manufacturers claim.

The gas meter is generally accepted as the most accurate measuring machine known—excelling even good watches. Only one sheep skin in six meets the standards set by the meter manufacturers.

The Modern Girl

Said the bank teller to the new girl who was making a deposit: "You didn't foot it up."

"No," she replied innocently, "I took a street car."

Spider and Ants Throw
20 Homes in Darkness

Bridgeport, Conn.—A tragedy in the insect world was discovered by employees of the electric light company here when seeking the cause of the dimming of lights in twenty homes.

A large spider had incautiously stepped from one exposed service line to another. His electrocuted body was discovered by an industrious ant, who led his fellows from an adjacent sand hill to feast upon the victim.

Hundreds of ants came up to the dead spider and were in turn electrocuted when they reached the body. The accumulated bodies of the insects caused a short circuit, which dimmed the lights.

Her Recognition

Small Elizabeth and her mother were walking down the street when they saw an urchin approaching them. Elizabeth stuck out her tongue. When they had gone on, her mother inquired "Why did you stick out your tongue at that little boy we just passed?" There was a pause while Elizabeth considered. "Why?" she replied, at length. "Why, mother, to show him I recognized him!"

A number of our esteemed fellow citizens say that they won't winter here again unless have to.

His word is his bond!

A "personal guarantee" means very little to you.
Unless you know the man who makes it.

Ninety per cent of the things bought for your home are selected by the lady member of the firm. She is the purchasing agent. Most men admit that she is a capable buyer, and the reason is this: She must be shown — convinced by proof — that an article is what she needs and is worth the price!

For that reason, she sees the advantage of dealing with a local merchant — a man whose "personal guarantee of satisfaction" means just what it says.

She knows that what he advertises in this paper is entitled to her consideration. Because she has confidence in her neighbor—the local dealer—she can safely invest the family funds in what he guarantees.
